Excerpt from Annual Dinner on Jefferson Day: April the Thirteenth One Thousand, Nine Hundred and Nine at the Hotel Savov
Toastmaster John Fox: Welcome, thrice welcome, one and all, is our greeting to this magnificent assemblage. The National Democratic Club is again honored by Democrats of renown who have come from all sections of our land to participate in our celebration of the 166th Anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson (Applause). Not only the apostle of true Democracy, but likewise the architect of the foundation upon which has been erected the enduring structure of American Liberty and Prosperity. Two thoughts of Jefferson might seem to have been written in the light of recent events, and may well be recalled at this moment. He said: Democrats consider the people as the safest depository of power in the last resort; they cherish them therefore, and wish to leave in them all the powers to the exercise of which they are competent. And again he said: It is not by the centralization of powers, but by their distribution that good government is effected. To Democrats gathered as we are to commemorate the life and services of the Founder of our Party, it is a fact of great pride that he who wrote the principles upon which the Democratic Party is founded, also inspired the constitutional law of our country, under which it has grown in far greater proportion than any other nation, has accomplished more for industry, for commerce, for labor, for invention, for the peace and good will of the whole world. It is gratifying to us to remember that the organic law of our land is based upon Democratic principles. (Applause.)
