

Reflections of a Window Cleaner

The author has based this book on his thirty years as a window cleaner observing human nature. It is filled with the varied personalities of all his customers giving a fascinating insight into their daily lives. Over the years he has seen it all, finding himself immersed in their lives sharing laughter, joy, wonder, horror and sadness. He says, They gave me an education money could never buy and taught me the meaning of trust, humility and, above all, friendship. It all started when he would tell anecdotes over dinner and at social gatherings. The response from the listeners was always the same: You should write a book. I loved the vernacular way it was written, loved the stories, and really empathized with the author throughout the book. All the way through I kept saying, Yes, yes, I agree with that, especially about how we should treat people. I read it in five days. Jay Margrave - Author I've thoroughly enjoyed this book. To be honest, I thought it would be in the narrative form. How wrong could I be! It is A Reflection on the Human Race. The author expertly describes the situations that have occurred during his work as a shiner some are funny, some sad and some tragic. Overwhelmingly, the book shows sincerity.
