

The Roots of Southern Distinctiveness: Tobacco and Society in Danville, Virginia, 1780-1865

Using Danville, Virginia, which was dominated by planter-entrepreneurs and tobacco, as an example, Siegel refutes traditional arguments that the Souths retarded development was caused by the Civil War. Comparing Danville and its surrounding county with a similar county in Virginia, a successful wheat and dairy county, he demonstrates that the Danville regions monocultures, products of the Souths peculiar climate and soils, were responsible for its economic underdevelopment.
